

565—3.33(473) Review by commission. A proposed decision of the presiding officer becomes the final decision of the commission without further proceedings unless there is an appeal to the commission within seven days from the entry of the proposed decision or the commission on its own motion at the meeting following entry of the proposed decision, decides to review it.

On appeal, the commission may review and reverse the findings of fact if the commission determines that such findings are clearly erroneous, or involve errors of law, which were the basis for decision.
